Q10. Write your own short fable (5-7 sentences) featuring a clever animal who tricks a less clever one. End with a clear moral.

Answer: Sample: 'A monkey saw a basket of mangoes near a careless farmer. Seeing a goat tied nearby, he called sweetly, "Brother goat, you are so noble! Please call out loudly so everyone may hear your strong voice." The proud goat began to bleat with all his might. The farmer ran to see what was wrong; the monkey quickly grabbed three mangoes and disappeared into the trees. "You have a strong voice," the monkey called as he went, "but you have not used it for yourself today." Moral: Do not be so eager for praise that you become someone else's tool.' (Many correct answers; rubric: clear plot + moral.)

Encourages original fable-writing.

LONG_ANSWER · HARD · 6-CBSE-ENG-RAF-08

Q11. Some readers say the raven is the real hero of the fable because he learns a lesson and grows. Do you agree? Justify in 5-6 sentences.

Answer: Sample: The raven is not the typical 'hero' — he is tricked, loses his cheese, and is mocked. But he is also the character who LEARNS the lesson the fable wants us to learn. By the end, the raven knows that flattery hides a motive. In that sense, his loss is the reader's gain — we learn through HIS mistake. So while the fox is clever, the raven is the character we identify with and grow with. He is the hero of the lesson, even if he is the loser of the cheese. (Rubric: clear position + reasons.)
